“The purpose of all war is peace.” St. Augustine

Course Description: This course is a structured and coherent investigation of the salient approaches to the study of international conflict and peacemaking. Conflict resolution is the process of attempting to resolve a dispute or a conflict, in our case, at the interstate level. This may involve conflict management in which the parties continue the conflict but with less extreme methods; settlement in which they reach agreement on enough issues that the conflict stops; or removal of the underlying causes of conflict—“resolution,” usually by means of creative diplomatic techniques.

This course will also examine the systemic contexts shaping the course of conflict resolution: these include alliance structures, the role of power, influence, fluctuating national interests, and the role of misperception in policy decisions.

Conflict itself has both positive and negative outcomes. Practitioners in the field of conflict resolution seek to find ways to promote positive outcomes and minimize the negative ones. Sometimes stalled or dysfunctional peace processes thwart negotiations and new strategies for rejuvenating or reorienting have to be devised. There exists an enormous body of literature on this subject with considerable confusion and competition among proponents of various approaches. Moreover—precisely because of this confusion—vital links of communication among various schools of thought either have never existed or have broken down.

A further aim of this course is to help students understand and thus help to build and repair these communication links, in the process helping you identify your own position and viewpoints within the epistemology of international relations as a whole. The objective is not to produce a “definitive” mode of analysis but to encourage thought about the interconnections between and among various conceptual approaches to war, conflict management and the modalities of sustainable peace settlements. With its strong historical orientation, the course will help students make sense of contemporary conflictual issues by placing these into a broader, informed context.

Course Goals: By the end of the course, students will be able to:

- Apply international relations theory to historical phenomena thereby gaining a firmer grasp of world issues and politics.
- Understand the policy prescriptions, moral principles and ethical dilemmas underlying the effective resolution of armed conflicts.
- Appreciate the problematic nature of international/security choices thus making them more informed citizens.
- Evaluate the impact of globalization processes and conditions on issues of peace.
- Better understand the scope and limits of arbitration and mediation as vital organizational tools in both international and domestic settings.
- Confront conflicts, at all levels, more creatively, with greater understanding of governing dynamics.
